Course in community drama

A THREE-MONTH course on Social Action Through Community Drama, run by the Mowbray-based Community Arts Project, starts in Cape Town tomorrow.

It will explore the use of the community drama as a tool for social change and is aimed specially at social and community workers and youth leaders.

In the first of three phases theoretical perspectives and drama skills will be explored; in the second, participants will work under supervision on a two-month drama project with community-based groups and in the last the participants will get together to report back and evaluate their experiences.

SUCCESS

The course organiser, Mr Derek Joubert, said community drama had been used with much success in Canada, India, Botswana and Britain, among other countries.

'It is an opportunity not to be missed by people interested in social change,' he said.
